When designing an app you have to consider the target devices. The iOS and Android app developers make use of different design and resolution resources. It is a same process to run the app on the device. But when you have an iPad or an Android tablet you might not get the same result on iPad. You have to make changes to the design, interface and other configuration of the app to run it on the iPad. Similarly, there are many good Android apps designed for different devices. They may have lots of details to design. You need to add to those design standards in order to make it compatible with the different devices. Different devices have different hardware and software. Some of the features that you may need to design are compatible. You need to pay attention to the screen sizes and the different resolution of the devices. There are two types of app designs. They are the universal app and the platform app. The platform apps are compatible with all the devices but they are limited to the platform such as iOS or Android. They only support the devices that belong to that platform. The universal app design support both platforms such as iOS and Android. They are compatible with the different devices but the same app can be executed in both iOS and Android. The first step to make a top quality app is to create the design. It is the most time consuming and difficult process. The concept of your app should be clear at this time. The app should support the different devices. You should consider the number of the features that the app will offer. Another step in design is to build the user interface. The interface is more than just designing the f678ea9f9e
